Letter from Sir John Malcolm to Mr. Metcalfe. October 20, 1821. My dear Metcalfe, I have received your letter of the 8th inst As far as your proceedings relate to the loans made and recommended, you are upon a rock; but it is melancholy to find such sentiments in the quarter to which you have alluded. They will do infinite mischief, though only for a short period. Every step you take to ameliorate the country will be misrepresented by fellows who have objects as incompatible with public virtue and good government as light is from darkness. That these men should be allowed to speak a word upon subjects such as you have to discuss and manage, is deplorable. But the fact is so; and though the circumstances in which you are placed require all your firmness, recollect, at the same time, they call for all your caution and prudence, and, above all, for great temper and patience. These qualities I should never ask you to exercise in any extraordinary degree for selfish views: were your personal interests alone at stake, I know you might give way to the spirit of an offended gentleman and high public officer. That is supposing matters at extreme; but you have a more momentous duty to perform. You have to fight the good fight, and to stand with the resolute but calm feelings such a cause must inspire, against all species of attacks that artful...
